Are you the type of person who needs to take an afternoon nap every single day? Do you regularly check Netflix's job openings for professional binge-watcher positions? Are you an expert at doing absolutely nothing for hours at a time? If you answered yes to any of those questions, this Ottawa-based travel agency has just the job for you. According to Travel and Leisure, the agency is currently on the hunt for four "professional slackers" to post up in their office in summery clothing and do...a whole lot of nothing.

The actual, real, not-a-joke job listing calls for 40 Slowpokes to join the travel agency's team for two weeks as Fakeation Specialists. The ideal applicant "takes great pride in doing as little as possible at any cost," is an expert daydreamer, dislikes interacting with others, and is a poor multitasker. Qualifications include enjoying sitting and lying down, being "not at all able to think outside the box," being uncomfortable with the words "productivity" and "deadlines," and prioritizing one's own relaxation above all else. The job's primary responsibilities? "None," per the listing.

Selected slackers will sit in the "cozy" office for six-hour shifts (7 a.m. to 1 p.m., and 1 p.m. to 7 p.m.) between January 22 and February 4. For those six hours, all you have to do is the incredibly stressful job of either sitting in a beach chair or lying on a towel while wearing a "summer outfit" and napping, reading, listening to music, meditating — whatever your lazy heart desires. Most importantly, you'll be required to "completely ignore stressful bypassing commuters and focus on your own relaxation." It'll be rough, but someone's got to do it.

If this sounds like your dream job, all you have to do is send a couple of sentences about yourself and why you're qualified to be a Fakeation Specialist; your flip-flop and summer outfit sizes; and a photo or video of yourself relaxing in the middle of a stressful environment to the link in the job listing by January 14. No resumé, cover letter, or any other certifications necessary, although, of course, experience napping in offices and classrooms is a major plus. Sadly, we've already spotted something of a catch in the job application: All the most qualified applicants will likely be too lazy to send in their credentials by the deadline.
